Several Testify That She Had No Money When Arrested.

Court Clerk Betta Gave Wagner $1 for Mrs. Bennett.

Mrs. Edith Bennett appeared in the Police Court this morning to concerning her charges of exbribery against Policeman Wagner, of the Oak street station. who was convicted of robbing McKeson & Robbins, the Fulton street drug gists, of over $1,800.

Her appearance was a surprise, as she has kept out of the way since gaining much notoriety in Crozler's case. It was the fact that Crozier took s chanterest in Mrs. Bennett, when the per was under arrest, that Crozier's employees became suspicious and inves-tigated his accounts.

The examination was heard before Justice McMahon in the rear examina-tion foom. Assistant District-Attorney J. Forbes Hennessey conducted the pros-ention.

Mrs. Fitssimmons, the matron of the Oak street police station, swore that Mrs. Bennett was brought to the station by Wagner. She was so drunk that she was tetally unable to take care of herself. When Mrs. Bennett was searched she found no pocketbook nor did she find any money.

Patrolman Little, of the Oak street station, testified to having met Wagner and another policeman on Duane street, while they were taking Mrs. Bennett to the station. She was so intoxicated that the officers had to support her. As she passed Little she said: "Ah there fatty," and followed this up with obscene language. Mrs. Fitssimmons, the matron of the and followed this up with obscene language.

Bergt. Lancer, of the Oak street station, testified that Mrs. Bennett had no pocketbook or money.

Lawyer Levy, for the defense, then moved to dismiss on the ground that Mrs. Bennett's story was not corroborated. Justice McMahon said: "Clerk Betts, of this court, corroborates her in so far as he swore to returning the II to Wagner out of the $4 which Mrs. Bonnett handed him to pay for her line of $2." He then held Wagner and cut down the ball from $2.500 to $1,500.

Wagner furnished ball.

Mrs. Bennett lives at *08 Hudson street, Hoboken, Justice McMahon and her lawyer, W. G. Davis, advised her to notify the District-Attorney If she was molested in any way. She said that she feared persecution.

M'LAUGHLIN'S JURORS.

Charles Fritz was sworn in as the fifth juror and George O. Sanborn was called, but found wanting in some of the re-wirements for a juror. John P. Ellison, a professor of mathe-matics, of 273 West Thirty-eighth street, reasted a sensation when Mr. Fox asked him:

"What is a concatenation of ideas"
"Well," said Mr. Ellison, "if we eliminate space, which is the ascription of a perfect mathematical reason for a co-existing plurality, all thought is resolved into a synthetic unit, which, of course, would be a concatenation of ideas.
"Precisely," gasped Mr. "ox.
Mr. Ellison had a prejudice, however, and was not accepted.
William J. Roe, of 207 West Twenty-third street, was asked by Lawyer House, after Mr. Fox had been putting abstruse conundrums, the following question:
